Be Kind to Animals Week—September 20–26

Recently we have been receiving many complaints related to pets and animals, such as waste left on the street, people leaving their pets unleashed in parks or feeding stray animals, and animals barking and crying.

So that both people who have pets and those who don't can live comfortably and in peace, we ask all pet owners to be responsible for the behavior of their pets.

● Training Your Pet

Please train your cats and dogs properly so that they adapt to community life without causing you trouble or bothering your neighbors.

Training Dogs

- Ensure that your dog doesn't bark excessively
- Prevent your dog from attacking other animals
- Make sure your dog listens to your instructions
- Ensure that your dog is accustomed to a collar and leash

Training Cats

- Make sure your cat remembers where the toilet is
- Get your cat accustomed to staying at home

● Act on Welfare and Management of Animals

Pet owners are obliged to ensure their pet's health and safety, and manage the behavior of their pets so that they never pose a hazard to anyone's life, person or property. The Act on Welfare and Management of Animals requires pet owners to use a collar to clarify their ownership and understand about infectious diseases transmitted by animals.

Stricter Penalties

The penalties for violating the Act on Welfare and Management of Animals has gotten stricter. If you kill or hurt an animal for no reason, you will be sentenced to up to two years in prison or fined up to two million yen. In addition, if you fail to feed your pet or abandon it, you will be subject to a fine of up to one million yen.

● Be Careful of Infectious Diseases Transmitted by Animals

Psittacosis, cat-scratch disease and rabies are examples of infectious diseases transmitted by animals. You should learn about the symptoms and ways human beings become infected with such diseases. You should also be sure to wash your hands and gargle well after you touch animals so that you will not be infected.

Just like human beings, animals get sick due to various disease-causing bacterium around them and lose physical strength, making them vulnerable to complications. If your pet gets sick, take it to an animal hospital or clinic as soon as possible.
